PACIFIC BIRDS
HABITAT JOINT VENTURE

Our Mission:

Creating the Ideal Environment for Bird Habitat Conservation

Our Vision:

By working together in the Pacific Region, we ensure wild birds thrive in abundant and diverse habitats that are safeguarded for future generations.

Our Impact:

"Pacific Birds grows strong partnerships, bringing together state and federal agencies, NGOs, Tribes, hunting and fishing organizations, farmers, and more across public and private lands. The support and guidance of Joint Ventures have been important to the progress towards bird conservation."

– Greg Green, Director of Conservation Programs Northwest, Ducks Unlimited

Pacific Birds is a large-scale partnership that convenes and supports the people working to conserve birds and their habitats.

We support resilient strategies for conservation, durable approaches to collaboration, and Indigenous and locally-led efforts to advance the pace and scale of solution-oriented approaches to conservation on natural and working lands.

The Pacific Birds service area encompasses over 473 million acres and supports more than one billion birds.

We work in Alaska; the western parts of British Columbia, Washington, and Oregon; the North Coast of California, Hawai'i; and the U.S. Pacific Islands. For the next decade, Pacific Birds will prioritize conservation in coastal habitats and Western forests.

Celebrating the 'Alae 'Ula in Hawai'i

In Hawai'i, Pacific Birds supports the recovery of Threatened and Endangered waterbirds, such as the 'alae 'ula (Hawaiian common gallinule). As part of an outreach campaign in 2026 to raise awareness for this endemic waterbird, Pacific Birds co-hosted 10 community events, including student art shows and volunteer restoration workdays.

Revitalizing Coastal Wetlands in British Columbia

Pacific Birds supported NTBC in securing a North American Wetlands Conservation Act Grant to acquire Hamilton Marsh, a prolific waterfowl brood marsh and important stopover site for migratory birds. Pacific Birds is also involved in the Cowichan Estuary Restoration Project – the largest estuary restoration initiative ever on Vancouver Island.

Growing the Next Generation of Oaks in Oregon

Pacific Birds is supporting partners by administering two National Fish and Wildlife Foundation grants on behalf of the Klamath Siskiyou Oak Network and the Willamette Valley Oak and Prairie Cooperative. Both collaboratives are leading large-scale oak restoration projects, which will improve habitat for imperiled birds such as the White-breasted Nuthatch.
